

Hawthorne Bridge

Though the Hawthorne is low on my list of favorite bridges that connects the halves of Portland, I wanted to be able to say I did all of them and include it in the “bridge chapter” of my master body of Oregon paintings. I solved this lack of inspiration by setting the goal of this painting to be as much about the human and natural activity around the west waterfront as I could and still be able to title it “Hawthorne Bridge”. I was happy to end up with “a nice slice of Portland” and it became my #1 selling greeting card out of the now over 100 paintings I have done.
